As Designated Director, the role carries personal responsibility for ensuring the Company meets its obligations as a reporting entity. That responsibility is discharged by resourcing, protecting and overseeing the compliance function, never by directing its determinations. No individual director, including the Managing Director, may instruct the Chief Compliance Officer on a suspicion determination or a statutory filing. Notes for the Board

The Designated Director carries personal exposure. Under the money laundering prevention framework, the authority may act against a reporting entity's designated director for failure to comply. The designation is therefore not ceremonial. It must be held by the Managing Director or a whole-time director authorised by the Board, and it cannot be held by a non-executive director who only attends meetings. The Board should record which director holds it.

Managing Director and Chief Executive Officer overlap unless the split is kept. Where both positions exist, the Managing Director owns direction, governance and the Board relationship, and the Chief Executive Officer owns the running of the business. If one person holds both, this description and the Chief Executive Officer description should be read together as a single role.

This description defines the scope of a Board position. It does not replace the Articles of Association, the Companies Act, 2013, or the Board resolution by which the appointment is made, each of which prevails over this document where they differ.
